New Banking Trojan Fobber, a new variant of Tinba

Fobber, a new variant of Tinba uses an interesting and unusual approach to make static analysis harder: In the original sample, there was no sign of Man-in-the-Browser (MitB) aiming to steal banking credentials but, since the malware has the capability to update itself, this possibility can be later added by the attackers. On our analysis, apart from the update feature, we only found the form-grabbing / cookie stealing malicious feature. Although this analysis is pretty comprehensive, this cannot be considerate ultimate, there are still pieces of the puzzles missing and possible misinterpretation in it.
